As the debate progressed Senator Heyburn tried to make it appear that there was a book agent plot concealed in the postal savings measure. He demanded to know why the framers of the bill had not provided rules and regulations for conducting the system of postal sav-

Senator Carter replied that this had been committed to the board of trustees under the bill following the rule of every country that had passed a postal savings bank law. By way of explanation, Senator Carter introduced into the debate a book containing about 300 pages, bound in green cloth, of civil government, since it is a union which purported to give the rules and of church and state to the extent of the regulations governing postal savings legislation involved and in principle conbanks in certain parts of Canada. Senator Heyburn thereupon scented the plot First, he tried to ascertain from Senator Carter what the book would cost. The he inquired how many possible depositors in postal savings banks there would be And then he made a mathematical computation of the number of these books that the American people would have to purchase in order to make the postal Pinchot investigating committee to fill and pure food expert, of the Department savings plan a success.

Tried Persuasion.

Senator Carter tried to persuade Mr Heyburn that the books were only for the guidance of the managers of these institutions, and that there was no duty imposed on depositors to buy these books. But Senator Carter's explanation only raised fresh troubles in the mind of Senator Heyburn. He then scented a plot to keep the depositors in ignorance regarding the operation of the system.

By way of illustration Senator Carter cited the case of the postal guide, which contained information respecting the pos tal service of the United States, a book which he commended to Senator Hev burn.
